TREATMENT, REAL AND IDEAL, OF ANIMALS.

By F. Howard Moore.

A large part of the energy of civilization has come out of the bodies of the great four-footed races. The horse, the ox, the mule, the elephant, the camel, the reindeer, the water buffalo, the yak, the dog, and the donkey—on the powerful and patient backs of these patient beings civilization has been borne for unknown hundreds of years.

Civilization is not an exclusively human thing. It is a joint product, the result of the combined labor and sacrifices of many races of mammals and birds. And no one of these races has the right to take more than its share of the blessings of civilization nor to shift upon others more than their portion of life's ills.

In the ideal state man treats the races of being affiliated with him not as objects of pillage, but as beings with rights and feelings and capabilities of happiness and misery like himself. He is kind to them and ever mindful of how he may gladden and enrich their necessarily meager lives.

He gets real pleasure by simply seeing them happy and realizing that he has in some measure contributed to that happiness. He provides them plenty to eat, comfortable homes, vacation days in which to rest, opportunities for pleasure and pastime, an education, and infirmaries for times of misfortune and decline.

QUESTION OF YOUR POSITION'S VALUE.

By John A. Howland.

I was talking with a bright young fellow the other day who has been nursing a little soreness against his employer. He went into the establishment as almost a beginner in the business. He has worked hard and faithfully for two years or more, with only one small increase in his salary. Six months ago, feeling that if he had progressed as he felt he had done, he was worth more money, he asked for more. But he hasn't got the "raise." He wasn't refused it; simply his employer hasn't given it to him.

That one greatest reason why this young man wouldn't think of leaving his employer was that in his work he felt he was getting a broad, liberal education in his specialty. That house which, through a friend there, had offered 50 per cent increase in salary, was slow, conservative, practically making no advance. In his present place of employment aggressive methods and unquestioned money to put them through had made it a standing example of up-to-date progress.

Men in business have built up organizations where they are besieged with applications for positions. Ordinarily that man who is an organizer in the true sense isn't searching out high priced, developed talent in other quarters with which to back up his business machinery. He is developing it himself. For this reason, in many lines of work, he has a double appreciation of the man who appreciates his organization for what that organization is. If he has a man drawing $10,000 salary who refuses to accept $20,000 a year in a third class establishment and time and again such cases develop—should the organizer volunteer to increase the employe's salary because of the refusal? The man is tried and proved through the refusal of that offer; he has indicated to his employer that he means to stay where he is and do his whole duty according to office standards. But the organizer himself made the organization attractive. Shall he not have some of the benefits?

PLANE OF LIFE NOW INTERNATIONAL.

By Dr. Gustave Spiller.

We are living on an international plane. A large part of the population dwells in towns, and not only is travel to distant places rapid and frequent, but the movement of population from locality to locality and from country to country is a decided feature of the times. Through the utilization of steam and electricity villages and countries have been brought near to each other, the telegraphs for example, almost annihilating distance; hence the development of international commerce on an unprecedented scale, each place receiving the products of the farthest lands.

Simultaneously the democratic trend in politics became more and more noticeable. Accordingly to-day the total absence of constitutional government is a rarity, and not only have most men the vote, but women will soon have it, too. Even the orient, which was supposed to be unalterably absolutistic in government, has offered us recently the gratifying spectacle of one nation after another, Egypt, India, Japan, China, Persia, Turkey, demanding a constitution, and in many cases obtaining it.

Rapid transit and rapid news have, however, not only led to a close contact between the individuals of the several nations, but between the nations themselves. Hence village politics has gradually given way to national politics, and this to international politics, and men are consequently almost as sensitive to-day concerning what happens a thousand miles away as to what happens next door.

PROBLEMS OF BETTER HEALTH EDUCATION.

By Dr. Thomas Grant Allen.

It is obvious that in education health is fundamental, that you cannot properly educate a child that hasn't good health and that to maintain this health the conditions in the schoolroom must be physically wholesome. What is not so obvious is that it is the duty of the school to so train the child that he will keep in good health in after life about as easily and as naturally as he reads. The school that has failed to train the child to get good health and keep it has failed in educating the child as truly as if he were unable to read good literature with intelligence and appreciation. A sound body is, therefore, both a prerequisite for a good education and a test by which the quality of the education can be measured.

The health problems of the public schools have reference not only to the health of the school children and their ability to maintain their health in after life, but also in a larger sense to the health of the entire community. These problems are: to keep the schools free from contagious disease; to secure the correction or removal of physical defects; to provide the children with the proper living conditions; so to train them in wholesome habits of right living as to protect and develop their health, and to fortify them against disease.

SIXTY YEARS A HARPIST.

Rosalie Spohr a Figure in Berlin's Musical and Social Life.

One of the most interesting characters in the musical life of Berlin is Rosalie Spohr, the harpist, who is a niece of the great violinist Louis Spohr, an exchange says. She made her first appearance in public on Dec. 13, 1849, at a concert given by Jennie Lind. She attracted attention first because of her distinguished musical descent, but after the world had once heard her her art made her famous.

There are few women before the public to-day who play the harp as virtuosi, although one sees them occasionally in the opera orchestras. So it is difficult nowadays to realize that Rosalia Spohr toured Europe in triumph. She found in Franz Liszt a devoted friend and enthusiastic admirer and he was proud to play with her at Weimar as well as give her the benefit of his artistic advice. Her career as a public performer ended after about six years. Then she became the wife of Count Saurma and the stage knew her no more. She still lives in Berlin, more than 80 years old, but enthusiastic in her devotion to the instrument with which she won the triumphs of her brief professional career. For three hours every day she practices the harp, and her technique has for that reason remained very complete for one of her age. Her talent was in a measure hereditary, since her aunt was a well-known harpist in her day. It was through her playing that Rosalie Spohr, who had begun her musical life as a pianist, turned her attention to the harp.

A widow for more than twenty years, it has been her devotion to her art that made life interesting to her during all this time. Her education was sound, in the first place, for she studied for two years under the harpist Grimm, who allowed her to play in public at the end of that period, although it was one of his principles that a harpist should study for ten years. Countess Rosalie has been an intimate friend of the German royal family, and both Friedrich and the empress were delighted to hear her play. Nowadays she is a unique figure in the musical and social life of Berlin and an inspiration to the younger students, who see what a joy and consolation an art may be to one who has acquired it faithfully.

SOME MARRIED MEDITATIONS.

By Clarence L. Cullen.

Another dead-sure preliminary to a touch is when she tells you that you are looking so tired around the eyes.

The time used to be when only men called an evening of wild and hysterical rummiferousness "having a good time."

Why is it that the woman who harps incessantly upon the inconstancy and the wiliness of men usually has a face like that of a perturbed sun perch?

It makes a man feel pretty cheap when, after admiring some woman he meets in a company, his wife tells him that she wears a whole wig, and proves it.

Why is it that a woman will strive frantically for years to catch her husband in a lie and then weep till her nose and eyes are all puffy and red when she finally succeeds?

When a woman is extraordinarily careful to lock away her own letters aren't you filled with a sort of involuntary suspicion that she'd read other people's letters if she got a chance?

Why is it that, when a man sits still for ten minutes or so, probably thinking that he'd better get a haircut to-morrow, his wife makes up her mind that he is dreaming of some other woman?

When the regular day arrives for her to have what she calls "a good cry," why shouldn't she phone the information to her husband, so that he can stay down with the fellers and have a good laugh?

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

Thousands of New Cases, a Salt Lake Gentile Newspaper Says.

A little while ago, remarks the Salt Lake Tribune, we printed a roster of men who are actually reputed, and doubtless correctly so, to have entered into new polygamous relations within recent years, very recent years, indeed, as compared with the date of the manifesto of 1890. The Deseret News, referring to that list, apparently accepted it as correct, and undertook to belittle "the polygamy scare" by saying that if these were all who had gone into polygamy since 1890 the fact was a matter of no great concern.

This admission, however, on the part of the church organ serves not to limit the number of new cases of polygamy, but as a foundation upon which reasonably to assume that polygamy is alarmingly prevalent, for to every new polygamous case that comes to the notice of the nonmormons there are doubtless a hundred that the nonmormons never hear anything about.

It is entirely safe, therefore, to say, as the Tribune has said heretofore, that the new cases of polygamy are numbered by the hundreds; perhaps it would be no great exaggeration to even say by the thousands.

At all events, it is a sure thing that there has been such a recrudescence of polygamy within recent years as could not have been dreamed of at any time between the outgiving of the manifesto and the conferring of statehood upon Utah.

THE HAMLET BY THE SEA.

There is a little seaport town,
Whence long ago a fleet of ships
Sped, white and gay, beyond where dips
The dim horizon down and down.

Old men sit on the pier and gaze,
With pipe in mouth and dull surmise,
And whisper 'thwart their bleer-eyed haze:
"Say! don't you see the sails a-rise?"

Mothers that maids were, also wait
To greet the vessels' glad return.
Yet vainly shall they watch and yearn;
No tide brings ships, or tells their fate.

Yet does the little port keep bright,
Having an atmosphere of pride
That such fair craft from it took flight,
The cliff o'ertopping waves to ride.

My heart, you are the little place
Close by the sea; your hopes, the fleet
That sailed forth to your buoyant beat,
Homeward its course no more to trace.

Sometimes you fret, then grow content
To dream of those enchanted things,
Which to the gray, drear past have lent
The spotless splendor of their wings.
—Ainslee's.

What Marcy Did

"Marcy!" repeated Miss Alcock, a trifle petulantly. "Randolph Marcy! I never heard one man speak so frequently of another as you do of Randolph Marcy. And I never laid eyes on him! I don't believe he actually exists!"

MacNish laughed. "Indeed he does!" he asserted. "He's my best friend—has been for years!"

"Then why have I never met him?" demanded Miss Alcock, severely. "Why haven't you ever brought him around? I've known you for perfect ages!"

There was indignation in her brown eyes, the righteous indignation of a girl who feels she has been deliberately cheated.

As MacNish looked at her blankly, trying to reason out just why she had never met Marcy, he was conscious of an odd, new feeling. His swift and amazed analysis of it disclosed that the reason she hadn't met Marcy was that he didn't want her to meet Marcy!

It wasn't that MacNish was in love with Daisy Alcock—far, far from it! MacNish had other plans and matrimony was not included among them. He was making a career and he could tell you all about how marriage hampered, distracted, impeded and mangled a career, for he had listened to others talk and had added a few deductions himself.

Some time in the distant future when he had reached the stage where bellboys flew agilely at his appearance and portly bankers doffed their hats hastily at sight of him, he might sensibly, carefully, sanely choose a wife and establish a home. He looked with pitying scorn upon his friends who surrendered to a mere temporary madness and attached a ball and chain to an ankle so early in life. This, however, did not prevent him from seeking the society of attractive girls as did other men. The only difference, MacNish told himself, was that he kept his head and regarded them with mere philosophic liking.

It was a great relief not to be eternally falling in and out of love. The reason he had sought the society of Daisy Alcock so much and so long was that in spite of her prettiness she seemed to have common sense and to be willing to take the calm friendship he offered and not expect it to develop into sentimentality as many girls, he was annoyed to say, did. He liked her, and he felt that she liked him and that was all there was to it.

Therefore he could not understand why he should have had a twinge of rebellion at the idea of Randolph Marcy, who was remarkably fascinating to girls with his gay laugh and graceful devotedness, as an acquaintance of Daisy Alcock's. MacNish prided himself on being far beyond the foolish stage where he thought a man's good looks counted. All sensible people, he felt, realized the charm of a rough-hewn face and a jaw that threatened achievements. MacNish had that kind of face and jaw.

WHEN MACNISH CAME TO.

He told himself that he had no use for a young woman who judged a man by his profile and could not look below the surface. Yet, though unacknowledged, he dimly realized that, running neck and neck with Randolph Marcy, he did not count for much with the average girl. Thus far he had never cared. Not being a marrying man, why should he mourn over the fact that he was not a social favorite.

"Why, why, I don't know!" MacNish found himself stammering to Miss Alcock's last question when she had repeated it with some acerbity. "I didn't know you were so anxious to meet Marcy!"

"I'm not!" said Miss Alcock, distinctly. Nothing irritates a girl so much as to be told an unpleasant truth. "I've lived happily thus far without meeting Mr. Marcy and no doubt the remainder of my life won't be wrecked if his acquaintanceship doesn't come my way! Only, knowing you so well—and so long—it seems queer, when he's such a friend of yours! Why, it's just as though you didn't want me to meet him!"

"Nothing of the sort!" declared MacNish, hastily. Nothing irritates a man so much as to be told an unpleasant truth.

"It is, too!" declared Miss Alcock. "You were just thinking of yourself and not a bit about my pleasure or amusement!"

MacNish sat up straight. It was a blow to be told that he was not all-sufficient for the moment, present, past or future. Also Daisy looked very stunning when she was angry. But he didn't enjoy her being angry. MacNish felt very much at sea.

"I thought you were different from most girls!" he told her. "I didn't realize that you were so intent on widening your circle of admirers!"

"You are perfectly horrid!" Miss Alcock flashed at him, with crimson cheeks. Then, to his unutterable horror, she burst into tears.

When MacNish came to he found himself seated beside Daisy Alcock with two arms, undeniably his, clasping her to him and a voice startlingly like his own begging her not to cry, interspersing his appeals with a string of words and phrases he had foolishly thought existed only in the love scenes of mushy novels.

Instead of fleeing instantly he remained rooted to the spot, wondering why he hadn't been there before. A world of glittering stars and sunshine and little blue flowers and trilling birds suddenly had sprung to life all around him. He regarded the man he had been ten minutes before with deep dislike and disgust.

"Darling," MacNish said toward the end of the evening, "we'll have Randolph Marcy for best man!"

"I don't care," said Daisy Alcock with beautiful indifference. "A lamp post would do just as well so long as I've got you!"—Chicago Daily News.

The election in San Francisco created no little surprise. The union labor leaders now have the opportunity to rehabilitate the standing of labor by giving the city a clean, honest administration.

Richmond Carnival is growing immensely popular and now our people must begin to figure how to board and room the crowd; that is the overflow; noses must be calculated by the wise noddles; for it would not do to have a lack of accommodations, for our visitors may say Richmond is not hospitable.

To The Public:

For the past four years this Company has been engaged in compiling an up-to-date Modern Abstract Plant of Contra Costa County, and at the present writing we have all conveyances up to date.

We are prepared to issue promptly and accurately Abstracts of Title, Title to Insurance Policies, and in fact any chain of title pertaining to the records of this County.

This office is equipped with a photograph-machine known as the "Rectigraph," being the first machine used in the State of California. With the same we can furnish, at a comparatively small cost, practically certified copies of all maps, deeds, or other recorded instruments.

This Company is backed by $100,000 with which to furnish policies of title insurance on lots in the City of Richmond. We will furnish a Title Insurance Policy on any lot in the City of Richmond, insuring the property to the extent of $1,000, for the same price that an Abstract of Title would cost from the date of partition of the San Pablo Rancho.

As references we herewith submit the following: Title Insurance & Guaranty Company, of 250 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.; The Great Western Power Company, 606 Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.; First National Bank of Martinez, Contra Costa County, Cal., and in fact any bank, banker or Attorney at law, of this County.

RICHMOND CARNIVAL

FLAMING POSTERS ANNOUNCE DATES

Great Preparations for Richmond's Crowning Event, Clark & Henery Construction Co. and the East Shore and Suburban, the Southern Pacific, Santa Fe, the Standard Oil Co., all believe the Street will be Ship-shape, stores likewise.

The Richmond Macdonald Avenue Street Carnival or Festival, as some term it, is to be quite an elaborate affair, as was mentioned in Terminal. The finance committee of the grand celebration has found their duties more strenuous since the committee of arrangements of Fire Company No 2, had received so much encouragement from the boosting in the Terminal that was so favorably received by the people, that they at once had printed beautiful flaming posters, and handsome yellow cards of large size, too, telling the world that there would be a festival of three days. The addition of time length of celebration has caused Chairman Logan of the finance committee to hustle for the sinews of war to carry on the celebration for the entire fete period. The finance committee has raised about $2,700 to the present time.

After getting out the fine festival posters and the street banners, of course the printing committee can rest upon its oars, now.

The plan of the selection of the Queen of Richmond Carnival was evolved, by one opposed to any contest. He proposed that each Fire Company draw five names, and one name out of twenty-five would be drawn and she would be Queen; the Terminal mentioned the matter as was suggested, but Fire Co. No. 2 had other plans. It was desired to raise money, and while the majority favored the no-contest plan, every one desired the excitement of a contest, so the firemen's committee in charge designated the Woman's Improvement Club of Richmond to conduct the contest that promises to be very exciting. So to start the affair six ladies from the east and one from the west were named, the most popular young ladies of this city, but declined and also one other was selected, and she declined, so the matter rests for volunteers. As the contest now stands there are in the running there are Misses E. La Selle, Mary Brown, D. Lindey and Ruth Glover, with the probability of a dark horse lady from the west side.

One of the club women in an interview says any young lady may contest who chooses; tickets are 10c. Tickets and ballot boxes are at Carter & Spagnoli's; Floyd's Canderie; Funk's Cigar Store, 510 Macdonald Avenue; Kinggett's and the Cozy Candy Store. Tickets may be obtained from Jones & Adkison and Ferguson's Drug Store.

Mr. Ferguson was the first one who first proposed street celebration, the Terminal gave the first big boost for it, the Leader first suggested a street carnival, while the erratic "Reckless" tried to administer a knock to the best boosting, even when it was doing all the printing for the great carnival.

These columns will use the word carnival, as that term is more correct, the term "festival" being applicable to anniversary feasts and the Leader's name is very correct for after this event, it probably is not intended to hold any other annual for Macdonald Avenue, but it makes no difference what the name "a rose by any other name smells as sweet," and the celebration is a "go."

The East Shore & Suburban Ry. are very busy rushing their track improvements; the Clark & Henery Construction Company have the avenue nearly completed; the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe are doing their share and the Standard Oil Co. are giving every assistance to the great celebration, along with every citizen and it is confidently expected that fully 100,000 people will visit our city and join the merry making on Macdonald Avenue, and the promenades—real carnival sport. Many new stores will join the older stores with brilliant and dazzling window displays. It deserves the the great honor to say that the "Wonderful Maze of Incandescence," the great night destroyer, will be the leading general night feature of the grandest event Richmond ever had. Superintendent H. B. Kinney, manager of the Richmond Light & Power Co., says that he would install a system of not fewer than 8,000 lights. The crowds will say: "Hip! Hip! Hooray! for Kinney!" with a tiger.

The Terminal has mentioned a list of carnival features at the festival of things different ones said they would like to see. It is hoped especially that Mayor Frank Mott, the great Oakland booster, will be given an opportunity to talk upon the proposed channel from San Pablo Bay through Richmond and how government appropriation may be secured; also to speak about the great benefit to the east bay cities of the north-west ferry from West San Pablo across San Pablo Bay to Point San Pedro.

It must be borne in mind that the city council and all the officials of Richmond are doing all in their power for the promotion of the celebration. They will have the avenue cleaned for the street events.

While there are two more days added as an inducement for some street shows that would not come but for the extension of time, the second day is better than the first, and Saturday, November 21, the last day, is better than all the others.

The Richmond Industrial Commission will decorate its headquarters at Macdonald Avenue at the Fourth street corner and will have in its window a collection of Richmond manufactures.

All the committees are doing a grand work, and the west side is at the front, shoulder to shoulder with the finance committee in this glorious "get-together" gala time.

TRAINS LEAVE RICHMOND FROM THE MACDONALD AVENUE DEPOTS AS FOLLOWS:

Southern Pacific

The subway, at the main Richmond depot on Macdonald avenue, at a cost of $85,000, a permanent mechanism, built in 1909, fixes for all time the central commercial traffic way.

The next improvement will be a modern, enlarged mission style depot for the AVENUE and a local electrieized road, an extension north from Berkeley to the depot, looping the loop via West Berkeley to San Francisco, with a 20-cent fare.

Toward San Francisco:

Southern Pacific is building track for electric service to Macdonald Avenue depot

Santa Fe Route

This road came to Richmond in 1900, before the Standard Oil refinery; expending for wharves at Ferry Point, tunnel, viaducts, depots, round-house, shops, library, warehouses and Terminal tracks about $1,700,000. Like the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe's main depot is on Macdonald avenue and it, will be of the mission style often moved near First Street, and enlarged.

The Oakland & East Side Railway, the northern terminus of the coast division, be here and will use gasoline motors to connect for San Francisco through the Key Route.

W. B. Trull, Agent.

Rumor is current that the Santa Fe will establish motor car service to San Francisco and a terminal station at Ohio Avenue and Sixth st. will be erected and the report has not been denied. A station will be also erected at Wall Street.

EAST SHORE & SUBURBAN RY

—Electric cars. Local service.—

This is the best city electric railway system in the world in a city nine years old. Fare from County Line to Macdonald Ave., and Twentieth St., Richmond, only 5c. to Point Richmond, 10c. This is building up the Avenue. Electric cars also stop at the Yard.

RICHMOND BELT RAILW'Y

The Belt Line connects Richmond with the commerce of the world through the oceanic and inland shipping with Richmond as a distributing center–via great overland railroads, the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, which, by traffic arrangements, control the Belt and its wharves, each assuming separate management every alternate year. The largest vessels afloat discharge and take on cargo and meet the Terminal overland railroads, here at deeper water than at San Francisco. The Belt Line also carries factory, warehouse, wharf and other employes, twice daily, via East Shore & Suburelectric cars to and from their homes in Richmond.

CARNIVAL

NOV. 18, 19, 20

Macdonald Avenue Grand Barbecue

Fire Company No. 2 is making arrangements for the street carnival and great progress is made. The merchants have put their vim into the celebration of the completion of one of the best business avnues in California and lodges are coming to the front. About $2000 are subscribed with the west side merchants making good promises. One of the features will be an automobile parade. The parade will headed by the city council followed by heads of departments; school children each carrying a flag; the Boys' Brigade and Bugle Corps; Richmond Lodges in regalia; Red Men of Contra Costa County bear silk flag; all the county officials; a half score of bands and the drum corps; all the Fire Companies; citizens; Sons of Daniel Boone and Young Blount in cart drawn by the Big Billy Goat bringing up the rear. All visitors will occupy positions of honor. If not moved the entire outfit of Clark & Henery Construction Company may follow the city council and Woman's clubs in automobiles in parade with their entire outfit. Places of reception will be ready; Hon. F. Mott may talk and will tell Richmond people how to secure appropriations to construct a channel from San Pablo Bay through our city and may tell of the great possibilities to be derived from the proposed opening of a North-west ferry route from Oakland, Berkeley and Richmond across San Pablo Bay to Point San Pedro opening the north-west trade. The date of Macdonald Avenue Carnival are announced. Probably November 20 will be the best day.

Richmond Volunteer Fire Company No. 2 have taken the initiative for a grand celebration of the completion of the street work on Macdonald avenue now nearing the point of completion at a cost to the property holders of $150,000. The dates are November 18, 19 and 20.

The Red Men, the Eagles and Fire Companies are all to the front working valiantly in the movement for the gala night with all its splendor; all the lodges and fraternities of Richmond, and all of Contra Costa County are cordially invited to be present. Prominent speakers will attend the street carvival, and every organization is boosting now the opening of Richmond's beautistreet in the rapidly growing busy center and Macdonald avenue sets the pace, and there will be others.

Richmond Light & Power Co. will arrange the lights on the avenue, a maze of incandescence with the center of luminosity about the grand stand east of the Post-office at Macdonald and Sixth; the button will be pressed that lights up the whole length of Macdonald avenue, and opens the festivities and Mayor Joe Willis will press the button and present the keys of the city to the Chief of the Fire Department. Then will follow the invocation; overture by the bands; oration; reading of the Declaration of Independeuce; Lord's Prayer; benediction; the march of school children with military music of national songs with all the pupils of Richmond schools headed by all the bands as escort, the Richmond band, Eagles' Drum Corps, Native Sons' Drum Corps and the Boys' Brigade and Bugle Corps; fire works the Horribles, clowns, Peary and Cook hunting for the North Pole, Red Man after Pale Face are some of the features; fine vari-colored lights will be used and every variety of display of fire-works. There will be dancing on a full mile of avenue in the fullest measure of joy, between contests, marching and games. There will be served a toothsome barbecue.

A good time is assured to all.

EAGLES TONIGHT.

The Eagles are practicing aviation for the flight to Maple Hall on next Saturday night. From near and afar there will be a large crowd at the grand ball of the Pt. Richmond Aerie, No. 354, Fraternal Order of Eagles. The hall will be charmingly decorated in colors of order and the advertisement that will appear in the Terminal today which will bring the popularity before the public by bringing the crowds to their great social dance, as was shown in the success of the functions of the Steam Fitters and of Winehaven Volunteer Fire Co.

Pt. Richmond Eagles exceed the Wright Brothers in aviation; that is they get larger crowds at the ball room.

The Eagles give a grand ball at Maple hall, Saturday evening, November 6. Some of the older birds are preparing to fly hence. The pin feathers of the eaglets are developing into gay plumes and the older birds will teach them the arts of flight by that time. Go and hop with the birdies on the maple floor.

Let us aviate to the

INDIAN CONTEST AND POW WOW.

The Red Men of Richmond Reservation expect to execute the first competitive drill in the near future and the first contest of teams for the beautiful $125 banner will be between the Shenandoahs of Pinole Reservation and the Onetahs of Richmond Reservation.

Onetah Tribe of Red Men, Imp., have entered for a competitive contest with the Shenandoahs of the Pinole Reservation for the handsome silk BANNER for the best team, and the first contest will be held on Richmond Reservation in the wigwam of the Onetahs, Macdonald Trail on the second sleep in November.

The Redskins are greatly elated over the receipt of the prize trophy, a handsome silk American flag received from the Pale Faces in exchange for wampum. It is amusing to see the hunters, warriors and chiefs of Richmond Reservation so well pleased with their trophy that they value as much as a Pinto Indian pony. Prize contests are coming at the various sleeps.

The Onetahs are to give a grand Pow Wow at the Happy Hunting Grounds, East Shore Park on next Thanksgiving eve, on Wednesday. All the braves and squaws of the forest would like to meet the white squaws and white bucks on this occasion and smoke with them the pipe of peace at their grand fandandango after the hunt.

BROUGHT UP SIMPLY.

Russian Grand Duchesses Are Merely Happy, Healthy Youngsters.

Of the four charming daughters of the Czar of Russia, Olga, the oldest, who is 14, is the cleverest. Very tall and slender, her figure is most graceful and she is famed for the entrancing smile which she bestows on all with whom she comes into contact. Tatiana, the second daughter, is really a beautiful girl, with the roseleaf skin, curly dark hair and regular features of an English child. She is the only delicate one of the four girls. Marie is placid, well behaved and obliging.

Anastasie, the youngest, is described by her governess, Miss Eager, as "a regular little pickle." Her name Anastasie, which means chain breaker, or prison opener, was given to her because to celebrate her birth the Czar pardoned and reinstated the students taking part in the riots in Moscow and St. Petersburg in the preceding winter.

All the grand duchesses speak English, French, and some German besides Russian. From an early age they have all had lessons in piano playing, drawing and painting. All four are excellent riders. After their lessons and games they always spend an hour or so working at knitting and embroidery. For Christmas they work all sorts of gifts for relatives and friends. Last year the Czar received a kettle holder from one of his daughters with an inscription worked in cross stitch, "Polly, Put the Kettle On," while two of the other girls went into partnership and knitted him a pair of slippers.

The Russian grand duchesses have been brought up with just the same simplicity which has marked the childhood of the little Wales children. Indeed, it was only lately that they began to realize their rank. The magnate of the Russian nursery is the young Czarovitch. All his sisters bow before him and his will is law.

EATING IN OLDEN DAYS.

Officers' Manners Regulated When Dining With Royalty.

Even at so late a period as the Restoration, 1660, it was the custom for the guests to take their own knives and forks to an English banquet. Pepys records that he did this when he went to the lord mayor's feast in the Guildhall. In the previous reign the lord chamberlain had found it necessary to issue regulations for the benefit of the officers invited to dine at the royal table. They were required to wear clean boots, not to be half drunk on their arrival, not to drink more than one goblet to every two dishes, not to throw the bones under the table, nor to lick their fingers.

The Stuarts undoubtedly did much to refine English table manners, for it was one of the points admired in Mary Queen of Scots that the customs she introduced from France made her court and royal banquets more exquisite and genteel than those of her rival, Queen Elizabeth. As forks came into use, the old-time importance of the table napkin began to wane. From being a necessity it became a luxury, on the fastidious use of which etiquette has at various times placed strange values.

Under the third empire in France St. Beuve brought disgrace upon himself because at breakfast at the Tuileries he carelessly opened his napkin and placed it over his two knees. To this he added the crime of cutting his egg in two at the middle. Court etiquette prescribed that the half-fold napkin should lie on the left knee, and the top of the egg was to be merely broken with the edge of the spoon and drained with the tip of the spoon. For his failings in these respects St. Beuve's name was struck off the imperial visiting list.

SPLINTERS.

Head gear—Mental adjustment.

It is better to be satisfied with a little than to lose all.

It is easy to be an optimist as long as you have an ample bank account.

A man should shoot his own dog before he poisons his next-door neighbor's cat.

It is a whole lot easier to count your friends when you are broke than when you are prosperous.

The man who is always picking out somebody else's way usually has a hard time finding his own.

Bowers—What do you think of women as golfers? Powers—They show much better form than men.

Moyer—Did you say he was the head surgeon at the hospital? Boyer—Yes, he is a brain specialist.

When people get peevish they often make the mistake of picking up a bigger rock than they can throw.

The girl with a pretty ankle doesn't complain a whole lot if she has to walk along the street when it rains.

Every man will tell you how to carry your load, but a mighty few of them will help you bear the burden.

Bowers—They say the world gets wiser as it grows older. Powers—Yes, nearly every man you meet nowadays knows it all.

Doing a Spanking Business.

"Gracious, Tommy!" exclaimed the startled visitor. "I never saw a lad get as many spankings as you do. Why, it seems to be a continuous performance down in the woodshed."

"Oh, I can stand it," laughed Tommy, with a wink.

"You can stand it?"

"Sure! When dad spanks me ma feels so sorry she gives me candy on the sly. Then when ma spanks me dad feels so sorry he gives me a quarter and takes me out to see the ball game."

A Slight Jolt.

Brown had just finished a narrative that was tedious and long drawn out.

"Say, Brown," exclaimed one of his audience, "you'd make a good bank cashier."

"Why do you think so?" queried Brown.

"Because," answered the other, "you are never short in your accounts."

DAIRY, GARDEN ORCHARD, FARM

Growing Peanuts.

H. J. Musser writes to the Burbank Review about peanut raising in California as follows:

A large portion of California is suitable for raising peanuts. They require so little water it makes a profitable crop to plant between the rows of young orchards not yet bearing. In selecting your land for planting peanuts, choose what we call a sandy loam, not coarse dry sand, but a light, porous soil that will readily clean from the nuts at harvest time, and you will have a good crop of marketable peanuts, as the market requires a clean, light-colored nut. Prepare the land to be planted the same as you would for corn and have a well pulverized field that is light and friable to the depth of six or eight inches. The time for planting should be after the frosts are over, so that the young plants will not be injured. In this section we can plant from the first week in April until the first of June and get a mature crop of nuts at harvest time, which is in October. The distance apart of the rows and the distance between the kernels in the rows must be determined by the quality of the soil and the variety of the peanut that you desire to raise. For the variety known as the Virginia Runner the rows should be three feet apart and the kernels eighteen inches apart in the rows. Not less than two kernels should be dropped, as one may fail to grow. The vine of the Jumbo peanut averages four feet across. Therefore the rows should be three and a half to four feet apart and the kernels not less than two feet apart in the row. It is important to have the rows sufficiently far apart that the vines will not overlap, which makes it very difficult to harvest when a sled cutter is used. The Spanish peanut is planted in rows two feet apart and about one foot apart in the rows. All seed should be covered about two to three inches deep.

It requires about one barley sack, or 25 pounds, of shelled nuts to plant one acre. For planting a large acreage it is very important to use a sled with a hoe attachment with a pipe leading upward about 18 inches, with a funnel-shaped top, as one man can drive the horses and one or two boys can drop the kernels at regular intervals. In small patches a light furrow can be turned with a one-horse plow and the seed dropped by hand and lightly covered with the hoe.

There is no secret process to raise good peanuts; it only requires the proper care and attention at the right time and the good sunshine and cultivation to keep all weed growths down. When the seed has been planted from three to five days go over the field with a two-horse harrow lengthwise of the rows, the harrow having the teeth slanted back 45 degrees. This will kill all weeds and give the peanut plants a chance ahead of the weed crop, and it will save going over the field with a cultivator after the first plants come up. After the plants are up to a size that is safe, put the weed sweeps on a one-horse cultivator and clean out between the rows, going twice in each row, so that you can run close to the rows on both sides. A good job at this will save a great deal of hoeing. Do not pretend to cover the blossoms, as that theory is a thing of the past. A better crop is obtained on flat surface growth without covering the blossoms. After the weed cutting with the horse tool is done, clean out each row with the hoe; keep your land mellow throughout the season and free from weeds.

When the plants begin to blossom and get about as large as your hand, run one good furrow down the center of each row and give a good irrigation. This is about the middle of June, or a little later, according to the time of planting.

As soon as the land will permit, give a careful cultivation, going twice in each row. Hoe over the rows again after irrigating and cultivating.

After the vines begin to spread do not disturb them, as the little shoot or peduncle under each blossom enters the ground and the nuts form on the end from one to two inches below the surface.

Feeding Onions to Fowls.

I see very little about this healthful food in any of the items for making fowls healthy, writes a Town and Country Journal subscriber. I raised a great many fowls, all kinds mixed, for a family barnyard, and had much less than the average amount of sickness among my poultry right through. I considered at the time that much of this was due to my practice of constant feeding of chopped onions to the fowls, and these often.

With young growing turkeys, at whose raising I was very successful, I used them freely, seldom letting a day go by without a feed of these chopped up fine, so the little turks could gobble them readily. I fed them these from the very first week, and they grew to look for them eagerly, and leave other food for them after a little. When deprived for a few days of this food they showed plainly their loss and would beg and hunt for their favorite delicacy and rush for it when given, as though famished for it.

Hens not accustomed to these as a diet were slower to learn to be fond of them, but when used to them, were as eager as the turkyes, and I fancied always that I could see a marked difference in fowl fed with and without onions.

Feather Plucking.

This is very often purely a vicious habit introduced by one or more hens, who have learned to pluck out little feathers in order to enjoy the meaty matter which adheres to the ends of them. If you can find out the ringleader and break her a great deal will have been done toward effecting a cure. The commonest cause of this tiresome habit is the want of occupation; poultry are sometimes overfed and they consequently get lazy, and then one cunning old hen begins to make mischief by pulling out another's feathers, and so the ball is started rolling. Poultry at liberty on a farm seldom become feather eaters, because they have plenty of work to find their food, and consequently have no time to indulge in such bad habits. Poultry kept in small pens in a more or less overcrowded state, however, are more liable to begin to pluck each other's feathers. During cold weather poultry must be kept at work scratching for small grain in several inches of chaff and other dry rubbish. It is a good plan to have the roosting places made with a scratching shed underneath. That economizes space in a small run; if that is not possible, have a small shed built for the purpose. Another way to keep poultry occupied is to hang cabbage in the run just an inch or two above their heads so that they have to jump up in order to peck at it. Any device of this kind will exercise the poultry and prevent them from forming so vicious a habit as feather plucking. Many people are of the opinion that feather plucking is caused through want of animal food. Whether this be true or not, it is a good thing to give fowls lean fibrin meat in their soft food. An excess of starchy food is certainly not good for poultry, as it tends to cause liver complaint and to make them fat and lazy, and in an indirect way rather encourages feather plucking. Sometimes hens do not stop with pulling out one another's feathers, but they will pull out their own. This habit is practically incurable, for nothing can be done beyond sponging the plumage with something very bitter. A solution made by soaking quassia in water is very good for this purpose, being very bitter nad distasteful to the hen. Even this, however, is unavailable in very bad cases, and the only thing to do is to kill the hen before she has taught her mates in the flock to follow her in the bad habit. The Dairy Hard.

In his recent letter on grading up dairy herds, by using a pure bred Jersey sire at the head of the herd of fair grade cows, E. R. Towle specially refers to results on a herd of 50 cows, which is encouraging to anyone who wants a better dairy herd and will patiently wait and work for it in this way. He says that their grading up work was begun in 1904, and here is the record for 1907: Number of cows, including heifers, 50; amount received from creamery, $3416.54; average per cow, $65.33; other products sold, hogs and cattle, $884.75; making a total of $4301.28. Average amount of butter per cow, 240 pounds. For 1908, the total sales at the creamery from 43 cows amounted to $2885.63; average amount of butter in cash received per cow, $67; other farm products sold, $682; total, $3738.93.

As there were a good number of heifers in 1908, the average production was a little lower than in 1907, but prices were higher. Last year the test for butter fat averaged from four to five per cent. This year the dairy is doing very well indeed, but as 24 out of 50 are heifers two and three years old, they can not be expected to do as well as older cows. As will be seen, a good sum is realized each year from the sale of swine and surplus stock, that should be properly credited to the dairy. There is also usually more hay than is fed on the farm.

With present methods of breeding and management carefully followed up, there should be no reason why in a short time this large herd should not go beyond the 300-pound mark, while at the same time the farm will be increasing in productiveness and real value. So much for the careful grading up to a most satisfactory working dairy, where pure bred animals can not be afforded at the first, as is so often the case. Northwest Pacific Farmer.

Grafting Wax.

Grafting wax is generally used for covering the wounds made in grafting. A good grafting wax is one that will not become too soft in summer, so as to melt and run down the stock, or so hard in winter as to crack and split off. A very reliable grafting wax is made by smelting together the following:

Resin, four parts, by weight; beeswax, two parts; tallow, one part. When well melted, pour into a pail of cold water, grease the hands slightly, and pull the wax until it is about the color of molasses candy. Make into balls and store for us. This wax should be warmed when applied. If it is too hard more tallow and less resin may be used. Some propagators use linseed oil instead of tallow.

Every dairyman should raise the heifer calves of his best cows and not depend on anybody's offerings to replenish his herd. It is absurd to suppose that he can buy cows as reasonably as he can raise them.

Extensive experiments have shown that cows produce more milk and butter if they are turned out of doors a portion of each day, than those that are confined in the stalls all the time.

PRESIDENT TAFT.

He Believes Religious Bigotry Has No Place in Civilization.

In his address to the Catholic Summer School at Pittsburg, Pa., on Lake Champlain, the other day, President Taft said:

"I am not a Catholic, but I have had in the last ten years a great deal to do with the Catholic church. My lot did not carry me into a part of the world that made me as familiar with the French explorers, the French leaders of civilization like Champlain, as it did into the regions of those leaders that came from Spain—into the Philippines where the same influence that carried Champlain here and that same influence that controlled him, controlled men equally brave and in certain respects more successful.

"Legaspi, who came out to the Philippines with five Augustinian monks, converted to Christianity that entire archipelago, now having some 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 souls and then perhaps 500,000—the only community of people in the entire Orient that today as a people are Christians. There is on the Luenta, the great public square facing the ocean in Manila, a statue carved by the great Spanish sculptor Querol on which there are two figures, Legaspi, holding the standard of Spain, but with his sword drawn, and behind him Erdaneta, a monk, holding aloft behind all the cross, and there is in that statue such movement, such force, such courage, that I used to like, even in the hot days of Manila, to stand in front of it and enjoy, as I thought I could, the spirit that the sculptor had tried to put in there of loyalty to country and faith in God.

"I think we are reaching a point in this country where we are very much more tolerant of everything and everybody than in the past, and where we are giving justice where justice ought to be given. We are no longer cherishing these narrow prejudices that come from denominational bigotry and we are able to recognize in the past these great heroes in religion and Christian faith and appreciate the virtues that they exhibited and follow the examples that they set for us.

"It fell to my lot, and I count it good luck, that I was accredited to the Vatican as the representative of the United States to settle the disputes arising out of our occupation of the Philippine Islands. I was the first and only official representative to the Vatican from this government, and I had the great pleasure of being received as such by that distinguished pontiff and statesman, Leo XIII.

"I am gratified to say now that every question between the church and the state in the Philippine Islands which were so closely united that it seemed almost impossible to make a separation of the two, as it had to be made under our constitution, has been settled fairly and justly to both sides, and no bad taste or injustice exists on either side with respect to those questions. Tolerance having supplanted bigotry, the negotiations between the Pope and our government were carried through with the full concurrence of all religious denominations, non-Catholics believing that the way to do things is to do them directly, and when a matter is to be settled that it should be settled with the head of the church who has authority to act."

Grief That Kills.

"My poor boy," said the beneficent old clergyman, who had encountered a young waif sobbing in the streets, "what ails you? Some case of dire distress has touched your heart chords no doubt."

"No," sniffed the lad; "you're clear off your base, old kinzoozicks. Me an' Snippy an' the rest of de fellies tin-canned the mangy old yellow cur up at Schwartz's grocery, an' while old Schwartz an' de gang followed de dog I sneaked back to de grocery to swipe dried apples. De Fido chased into Schmitt's orchard, an' de gang cribbed de swellest peaches you ever seen, an' den dey smoked grapevine cigarettes and set the barn afire. I made a sashay into de apple barrel at de grocery, an' de delivery boy pasted me with a bed slat, an' it hurts yet, an' I didn't get to see de fire an' didn't get nothin' to eat, an' I wished I wuz dead—doggone it all!"—Bohemian Magazine.

The Singer's Progress.

In narrating a story of a naughty girl and an English magistrate in his recent book, "Old and Odd Memories," the Hon. Lionel A. Tollemache supplements it with that famous example of anticlimax, the rebuke of a head master to youthful Etonians for unpunctuality at chapel: "Your conduct is an insult to the Almighty and keeps the canons waiting."

The young girl mentioned was had up before the magistrate by a farmer for killing one of his ducks with a stone. The case against her was quite clear, but it was thought worth while to call witnesses to prove that she was very naughty indeed, and in the habit of using bad language.

Then, in solemn accents, the magistrate addressed her:

"Little girl, you have heard the evidence against you, and you can see how one thing leads to another. You began by cursing and swearing and blaspheming your Maker and you have ended by throwing a stone at a duck."

Eccentric Count Bertrand.

Count Bertrand, who lived in Paris, was a very eccentric man, and to one of his eccentricities he ascribed his long life. Once a year he would betake himself to bed and stay there for three months. On these occasions he would see no one but his servant, who brought him his meals, and even him he forbade to speak. Just before the Germans began the siege of Paris the count went to bed, and the servant, true to his injunctions, said nothing of the events going on around him. One day the bread proved so bad the count demanded an explanation, whereby, of course, he learned that Paris was encompassed by the enemy. Springing out of bed, the count paced the floor, repeating, "What should a Bertrand do under such circumstances?" Suddenly he stopped, exclaiming, "We should go to bed!" and to bed he went, and stayed there until the siege was over.
